C FILE - PROPERTIES OF PHYSICAL SYMPTOMS:

The physical locations of the symptoms, as they are found primarily in the ABC file, represent the theme of the illness. They show the consequences of dynamic processes. However, these processes appear in the form of dynamic attributes (accompanying symptoms, peculiarities), which are the subject of this C file.

Attributes are, for example, types of pain, feelings in the organ area or a changed external appearance. All are an expression of an individual dynamic reaction. This is shown on level C by the attributes. Their special value lies in the fact that there must be content-related correspondences on level A.

This means that among the mind symptoms present in the anamnesis there is one that corresponds to the attribute in terms of content. This correspondence makes it possible to determine the mind symptom that matches the attribute within the context of the disease process (see part 3 of this series of articles). This determination is carried out by comparing the message of the attribute with the messages of the mental symptoms present in the anamnesis. The mental symptom that matches the attribute in terms of content should then logically be the mental symptom suitable for repertorization.
e.g.:

С	burning pain, sensation	problem of being exposed to contradictions, i.e. not experiencing reciprocity, but to chafe out by the conditions

A possible analogous meaning to burning pain among the emotional symptoms of the anamnesis could be:

cannot stop talking about old conflicts, is resentful A 1:

It should be noted here that if a BC symptom (physical symptom C with modality B) also has an attribute C, this attribute can be used both as a singular C symptom and as a content basis for the above comparison.

e.g.: BC Stomach pain after eating. + C Stomach pain burning

A. CONSEQUENCES OF CONFLICT IN THE FORM OF AN INTERNAL EMOTIONAL REACTION:

• Concern - inner perception in the form of pain:

The localization of a pain refers to the specific adaptation problem, the characteristics of the pain describe the dynamics of the adaptation problem.

Pain is fundamentally an expression of the futile effort to adapt.

С	persistent pain, inflammation	to be resentful, unable to get over disappointments, unable to reconcile oneself with futile efforts
С	pain, sensation spreading	does not want to accept that the conflict cannot be resolved, so he increases his efforts more and more without ultimately being successful (a "widespread fire" develops from an initially only local focus of conflict)
C	pain, sensation tearing apart	to be torn apart between two emotional opposites
С	radiating pain, sensation	not only to have come into conflict with a local topic but also with topic-specific backgrounds despite his efforts to adapt
С	pain, sensation goes upwards, ascending	problem of being under pressure, having to face it, having to endure
С	pain, sensation in the digestive tract goes upwards, is ascending	problem of being under external pressure from the social presence of others, not being able to coordinate with their demands, not being able to create communicative reciprocity
С	pain, sensation goes downwards, descending	problem of having to face worse location conditions, having to adapt to unsuitable bottom conditions
С	pain, sensation in the digestive tract _goes downwards, descending	problem of not being able to create communicative reciprocity, to coordinate with the demands of others, so feeling socially rejected, being separated
